The Rakhine State Investment Fair presents the barely explored side of Rakhine State that has brimming opportunities and warm and friendly people, all eager to be part of the development adventure.

Money spent by the government and development partners and investment made by private sectors will be a vote of confidence in the resilience and potential of Rakhine and its people said the State Counsellor.

At the Invest Myanmar Summit 2019 held late last month in Nay Pyi Taw, a wide range of new and exciting investment projects to be implemented in Rakhine State, from road and airport construction to the development of industrial estates and new cities, were shared with some 1,600 participants. These are included within the Project Bank and transparent and competitive tender processes for the implementation of these projects will soon begin added the State Counsellor.

While Myanmar has benefited to a large extent from the opening up of our economy, much of Rakhine's economic potential still remains untapped. For too long the international community's attention has been focused narrowly on negative aspects related to problems in North Rakhine rather than on the larger picture that shows the immense potential of this State for peace and development, said the State Counsellor in her opening speech at the fair.
